Talk

Don't be afraid to use "parentese" when speaking to your baby. Speaking in a higher pitch and at a slower speed naturally engages your infant.

Read

Encourage your child to hold books, turn the pages, and discuss how they interact with books. "Does the book taste yummy? Let's read it instead!"

Play

Play "Letter of the Day." Pick a letter and encourage your child to call it out every time you see an object that starts with that letter or use a word that starts with that letter.

Sing

Use repeated motions or movements when singing songs. This helps to develop the fine motor muscles needed when learning to write.

Write

Children need to learn shapes in order to recognize their letters. Point out the shapes you find in your home, the store, even the pediatrician's office.
