Talk

When your child asks you a question, ask them "What do you think?" or even "Why do you think that is?" This allows them to process what they already know and expand on it.

Read

Sitting still and reading a whole book can be hard work. It's okay if you only read a few pages at a time with your child.

Play

Children need time to plan their play, to negotiate roles, to choose or make props, and to carry out their play ideas. It can take children up to an hour to develop and act out play scenarios.

Sing

Clap to music you hear with your child. This helps them to identify the rhythms. It will also be useful when they begin to sound out words they read.

Write

Pour rice, flour, sugar, shaving cream, even sprinkles on a rimmed sheet pan and have your child practice making shapes and letters with their fingers, a wooden spoon or chopsticks.
